

Sportscover appoints new Claim's Staff

Sportscover has today announced two new additions to their claims department.

David Lamb, Sportscover's CEO in Australia, is extremely excited about the two new staff joining the company and the additional experience they will bring to the business. David said, "I am delighted with the two additions to the claims team. The two new staff members will bring a depth of knowledge and experience that will further strengthen Sportscover's claims department and prepare us for the growth in business we are currently experiencing as a result of carrier instability and the resulting flight to quality. Claims are our number one priority and it's critical we continue to provide quality service and technical advice to our clients and brokers".

Melina Papas has joined Sportscover as a Claims Relationship Manager. Melina has worked in the insurance industry for ten years, with experience at a number of companies including Honan Insurance Brokers, Marsh, Crawford and Company and, most recently, managing liability claims for the Department of Sustainability and Environment.

Fiona Davis joins Sportscover from Toll Transport where she managed workers' compensation claims, settling and negotiating litigated matters and dealing with a multitude of lawyers, doctors, injured workers and investigative bodies. Fiona has a well-rounded background having also worked at QBE, JLT and also for a third party claims administrator and has handled various types of bodily injury and liability claims for around 15 years.
